Nina Dow Spoke at Boston College Law School's Middle Eastern Law Students Association Program

Nina Dow spoke on a panel at the Middle Eastern Law Students Association's (MELSA) November 14 event at Boston College Law School. Speakers on the panel discussed what it's like to be a practicing attorney who identifies as Middle Eastern and shared experiences, insights and guidance on how to navigate law school and build a successful career in the legal field as an attorney of Middle Eastern descent. At the event, panelists discussed the challenges and benefits of being an attorney with a different background, the advice they would give to their first-year associate self, what they would do again, what they would change, and the advice they would give to law students.
