OVERVIEW

Katelyn Lee focuses her practice on family law, representing clients in matters involving divorce, child custody, parenting arrangements, and other family-related legal issues. She brings to her practice a strong foundation in legal research, writing, and analysis developed through judicial clerkships and clinical experience.

Before Bowditch

Katie served as a law clerk at the Massachusetts Appeals Court and as an intern at the U.S. District Court for the District of Massachusetts. She also gained practical legal experience through the BU/MIT Student Innovations Law Clinic, where she advised Boston University and MIT students on legal issues related to their ventures and prepared contracts, trademark applications, Freedom of Information Act requests, and other legal documents.

Before becoming an attorney, Katie studied statistics and discrete math, culminating in a Master's degree in statistics. She brings an eye for numbers and mathematical logic—as well as competency with statistical models, including neural networks—to all her legal work.
